

The lives we've lost in mass shootings — again

THREE MONTHS ago, after 25 people were gunned down in a church in the Texas countryside, we republished a list of some of the other victims of mass shootings in the United States. We thought it important to remember the names and honor the lives of those killed. We believed it necessary to ask — again: “When will we decide it’s enough?” We hoped, without much hope, for action from President Trump and Republicans in Congress.

Sadly — infuriatingly — they did not act. Sadly — infuriatingly — the list of lives lost in mass shootings has grown. Again.

This time the slaughter occurred at a public high school in South Florida. Seventeen people — mostly teenagers just starting out in life but also adults who sacrificed their lives for students — were gunned down and killed just as classes were letting out on Wednesday.

And so again we remember their names. We act again in sadness — but also, this time, in solidarity: solidarity with the students in Florida who are telling Mr. Trump and other politicians that they have had enough of their thoughts and prayers. They want action to keep weapons of war out of the wrong hands. We stand with them.

Not every shooting can be prevented. Not every killer can be deterred. But that doesn't mean we shouldn't try. Weapons of war are not needed for hunting or personal defense, and they should not be allowed.

So the question — again — is: “When will we decide it's enough?”
